Tarte

... from the Black-Forest

The origins of tarte flambée can be traced back to great-grandmother's time, when bread was baked in a wood-fired oven on every Black Forest and Alsatian farm. To ensure proper baking-
To determine the oven temperature, the farmer's wife rolled out a small piece of bread dough thinly. She spread it with soured cream, thus giving it a useful purpose, and placed this cream cake in the oven for two to three minutes. If the cream cake was cooked through in this time, the oven had reached the right temperature for baking bread. The hot cream cake was eaten immediately as a welcome snack.
